

Introduction

A university code of ethics is a set of values and principles that define the expected ethical behavior of members of the academic community, including students, faculty, and administrative staff. The university code of ethics aims to promote academic integrity and honesty, and to ensure an educational environment that respects everyone and encourages personal and professional growth.

Typically, a university code of ethics includes a set of rules and guidelines covering issues related to cheating and academic dishonesty, respecting intellectual property rights, promoting collaboration and effective communication, and conducting oneself with honesty and integrity in all academic and research activities.

University codes of ethics are considered important tools in building and reinforcing a culture of integrity and ethics within educational institutions, providing a fundamental framework for promoting social and ethical responsibility among all members of the academic community.

The implementation of a university code of ethics is usually carried out by incorporating it into the internal regulations of universities and colleges, distributing it to all members, and obtaining their signatures as a sign of their agreement and commitment to the values and principles it embodies.
